

OVERVIEW

Raymond Lowe is Chief Information Officer at Kelley Kronenberg where he is focused on digital transformation of our technology applications as well as accelerating our work optimization processes.

Ray comes to us as an accomplished technology executive with a combination of technical expertise and skills in business analysis, team leadership, and work process optimization in the design and implementation of software systems and business-enhancing technology. Prior to joining the firm, Ray held the position of Vice President, Information Technology for ten years at a global leader in international logistics. While there, he had many successes, including achieving significant annual savings through the rollout of new ERP software across multiple branches throughout the country, maximizing the IT team productivity and efficiency through ongoing coaching and mentoring and creating workflow automation to enforce and assist with compliance to company and government policies.
